An Era of Action for Prevention

By SRSB Virginia Gamba

Since the creation of the Children and Armed Conflict (CAAC) mandate 24 years ago, the international community has developed powerful instruments to strengthen the protection of boys and girls affected by armed conflict.

However, this has not been sufficient to stop violations committed against children in conflicts around the world. As the nature of conflict evolves and emerging issues take precedence, existing tools continuously need to be refined and redesigned.

With the 25th anniversary of the Children and Armed Conflict mandate approaching, we need to reflect on why, despite the existence of powerful instruments, violations against children are continuing unabated. Consideration needs to be given to whether existing international norms and frameworks are strong enough to respond to and prevent violations or whether the Children are used and abused, as expendable fuel of armed conflict. It is our duty to ensure that they stop being violated and benefit from the best protection possible main issue is the translation of those norms and frameworks into tangible actions on the ground.

Actions are powerful; I have launched the ACT to Protect campaign to embrace this idea, to move from commitments to actions, from reaction to prevention, in line with the vision of the Secretary-General.

There is no single formula to cure the plight of children affected by conflict; but together, there are concrete actions that we can take to protect boys and girls and to build protective environments for children during conflicts.

PROTECTING children used and abused by, for and in armed conflict. This implies maintaining a strong monitoring and reporting mechanism, while increasing our advocacy with parties to conflict and securing the necessary resources for child protection capacities on the ground.

PREVENTING violations committed against children from occurring in the first place remains the best way to protect them. Prevention should be at the heart of our actions as per Security Council Resolution 2427 (2018). Member States as well as regional and sub-regional organizations are called to develop and expand initiatives to prevent violations and abuses against children affected by armed conflict, which can include the development of prevention plans, working with communities to thwart violations before they can take place, as well as endorsing international instruments and strengthening accountability.

RAISING awareness and strengthening partnerships for children is also crucial to make the voices of the most vulnerable heard in times of war, so they can resonate loud and clear at the highest level. Through promoting the stories of conflict-affected children, strengthening advocacy and messaging on the six CAAC violations and mainstreaming the Children and Armed Conflict agenda, we can ensure that these issues remain a priority for the international community. Increasing and expanding partnerships with regional and sub-regional organizations, Member States, UN agencies, civil society, academia and other relevant entities is also an inherent part of the CAAC mandate activities. As we are approaching the 25th anniversary of the mandate, we must build on our achievements for children.

PROMOTING lessons learned and best practices.

We all know that the protection of children requires concerted efforts from all of us, from families, to communities, to Member States to sub-regional, regional and international organizations, and on the ground. Only together, united in our will, can we implement the changes required for the protection of children. This also means learning from past experience and making sure that our collective approach to protect children improves constantly through issues such as reintegration, the inclusion of child protection measures into mediation and peace processes and providing support and capacity to child protection actors.

Together, we have come a long way to defend the rights of children. The time has come to reach the furthest behind. Abandoning children in conflict zones to a violent fate is unacceptable. Let us act now so that future generations might remember us for what we did to better protect children affected by armed conflict and not for what we failed to do

I would like to express my gratitude to the donors to the Trust Fund for Children and Armed Conflict. Their contributions have enabled me to implement all aspects of the mandate and thus strengthen the protection of children affected by war. Through these contributions, we have financed additional temporary staff capacity, travel of technical staff to support the Country Task Forces on Monitoring and Reporting (CTFRM) in the development of action plans, public outreach and advocacy campaigns, and participation in the analysis, assessment and response to new and emerging trends in violations against children in armed conflict.

I look forward to continuing and intensifying our collaboration in the coming year.

Thank you,

Virginia Gamba

Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict

A mandate guided by four pillars

These four pillars aim to guide the actions of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict (OSRSG-CAAC) and its partners in the coming years.

The Children and Armed Conflict mandate sits at the junction of the human rights, peace and security, peacebuilding, development and humanitarian agendas.

It is also linked to other thematic agendas such as the Youth, Peace and Security, the Protection of Civilians and the Women, Peace and Security agendas. While it is important to recognize those links and build bridges between different agendas, it is equally important to maintain the specificity of the Children and Armed Conflict mandate as a topic in its own right.

The Children and Armed Conflict mandate fosters a unique collaboration within the United Nations family between a broad range of entities as well as with outside actors including Member States, regional and sub-regional organizations and civil society partners, among others. Finally, it also provides crucial inputs to the Sustainable Development Goals (SDG) in support of the Agenda 2030.

The Sustainable Development Goals in support of the Agenda 2030

These goals are particularly relevant for the Children and Armed Conflict mandate

- Goal 3: Ensure healthy lives and promote well-being for all at all ages
- Goal 4: Quality Education
- Goal 8: Promote inclusive and sustainable economic growth, employment and decent work for all
- Goal 16: Promote just, peaceful and inclusive societies

Four pillars to guide the mandate of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict

1 Protecting children used and abused by, for and in armed conflict

- 1 Monitoring and reporting
- 2 Advocating with parties to conflict
- 3 Securing capacity and resources

2 Preventing violations committed against children in armed conflict

- 4 Developing prevention plans
- 5 Strengthening accountability
- 6 Promoting international commitments

3 Raising awareness and strengthening partnerships for children

- 7 Providing a space for children to be heard
- 8 Mainstreaming CAAC issues globally
- 9 Strategic communications and key messaging

4 Promoting lessons learned and best practices

- 10 Strengthening training and research on CAAC
- 11 Advocating for the reintegration of children affected by conflict
- 12 Integrating child protection measures in mediation & peace processes

Pillar 4: Achievements and Activities

● Launch of the Global Coalition for Reintegration of Child Soldiers (GCR) together with UNICEF in September 2018. The Coalition gained increased support throughout the months and several consultations were organized with academia, NGOs, Member States, financing experts, international organizations as well as former child soldiers and other conflict-affected children. These consultations enabled the GCR to deepen its research on the gaps and needs in funding and programming and support its recommendations on new modalities or mechanisms to ensure long-term, sustainable funding for this strategic post-conflict intervention. Three papers will be published in 2020.

● Development of the *Practical guidance for mediators to protect children in situations of armed conflict, as encouraged by the Security Council in its Presidential Statement on 31 October 2017 (S/PRST/2017/21). The OSRSG CAAC, in collaboration with the Department of Political and Peacebuilding Affairs, the Department of Peace Operations, and UNICEF, held two consultations bringing together senior level mediation and child protection experts. The first consultation took place in November 2018 in Geneva, funded by the Government of Sweden, and the second one, at high-level, took place in October 2019 in Brussels, funded by the Government of Belgium. The latter was facilitated by the European Institute of Peace and aimed at reviewing the draft guidance while discussing lessons learned and challenges faced to integrate child protection issues in peace processes throughout the years. The guidance was published on 12 February 2020.

● The Special Representative continued to work with NATO to strengthen its child protection architecture by supporting training for child protection focal points, stock-taking of lessons learned and best practices, and contributed to the update of the policy document on the protection of children in armed conflict.

● In 2018-2019, the CAAC Office provided briefings and trainings on children and armed conflict to experts from international and regional organizations and Member States, including in Myanmar, Thailand, the Philippines and for NATO. Office staff also participated in child protection workshops organized by the Department of Peace Operations and contributed to the development of child protection training modules for the G5 Sahel Forces and NATO. The SRSRSG also supported the launch of the Manual for Child Protection staff in UN peace operations in New York in November 2019.

● The opening of the United Nations Liaison Office for Children and Armed Conflict (Europe) facilitated trainings and briefings on CAAC issues with Europe based organizations, including the European External Action Service and human rights and gender advisers from Common Security and Defence Policy missions of the European Union.

● The Special Representative travelled to Doha in December 2019 for the establishment of the analysis and outreach hub of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict in Qatar.

● The Special Representative actively advocated for a rights-based approach to address the plight of children actually or allegedly associated with groups listed as terrorists by the United Nations, in cooperation with relevant partners within and outside the United Nations. She co-led a group of United Nations counterparts on the issue of children and foreign fighters to ensure child rights are upheld in all contexts and countries concerned, including host countries and countries of origin.
